SPRING NEWSLETTER

2018

LETTER FROM THE MESA VERDE NATIONAL PARK SUPERINTENDENT

As I walked to my office this morning, I noticed a slate gray sky and felt a cold wind blowing from the southwest.

Another blustery spring day. I've seen more staff in the park than visitors over the winter, but that's starting to change.

Spring break is upon us. Daylight Savings Time is here, along with longer days. Both will bring warm weather and more visitors to Mesa Verde and soon the ratio of staff to visitors will change dramatically. We're looking forward to another year full of tours, special events and a few changes. We've moved our off site tour ticket sales outlet to the Durango Welcome Center on Main Ave. We feel it will provide convenient access to purchase tickets and park information for visitors in, and residents of Durango.

A new audio-visual system was installed in the Chapin Mesa Museum. Funding for the improvements came from a $1 per night optional charge to guests staying at the Far View Lodge. Funds collected by our concessioner, Aramark, were sent to the National Park Foundation and then to the Mesa Verde Foundation (MVF) under the Guest Donation Program. The program allows us to use these funds to improve the visitor experience. This upgrade has resulted in high definition video and multi-channel stereo sound. Improvements to the system at the Morefield Amphitheater will be completed later this year.

These improvements will enhance the enjoyment of our visitors watching the orientation video, and other videos currently in production. I'll talk more about those in a future column. For now, it's time to turn off my computer, put on my jacket and brave the fierce spring winds on my way home. Thank you for your support of a wonderful park,

Cliff Spencer
Mesa Verde Superintendent

Mesa Verde Foundation Provides Funding for Cliff Palace Restoration

As the largest and most famous cliff dwelling in Mesa Verde National Park, Cliff Palace is as iconic as the Park itself. Each year, thousands of visitors view Cliff Palace in awe from one of the nearby overlooks or take a ranger-led guided tour of this magnificent Ancestral Puebloan ruin. In 2011, during a tour, a ranger noticed that a wall in Kiva F, the 13th-century structure located on the southern part of the cliff alcove, was leaning into the structure. Although after initial examinations National Park Service archaeologists thought the issue was localized in Kiva F, further examination revealed a much larger problem. After months of careful study, archaeologists found that the south half of Cliff Palace was suffering from localized deterioration of individual structures and features, as well as systemic structural issues. Cliff Palace was built on a combination of bedrock on the north side and loose soil and rubble on the southside. As a result, the structures built on the sandy substrates has begun to slide, causing structural damage to the prehistoric structures. After conducting numerous studies and examinations, a team of archaeologists and stabilization experts began stabilization work in 2015. Since work began, Cliff Palace has been closed each fall to allow for this critical work to be completed.

The Mesa Verde Foundation is proud to support these efforts by providing funding for the stabilization work. We recently transferred $70,000—the result of donations from a number of donors—to support the work during fall 2018. To learn more about Cliff Palace and the work of the National Park Service to preserve and stabilize it, visit nps.gov/meve/learn/historyculture/cp_preservation_currentneeds.htm. More Bear Lockers Needed for Morefield Campground

Last summer, Mesa Verde National Park staff and visitors reported an increased number of bear sightings in the park. More sightings no doubt mean an increased risk of interactions between people and bears.

Morefield Campground, the park's only campground, is in the middle of prime black bear habitat due to the abundance of vegetation that provides forage for bears throughout the summer. In the past 25 years, there have been numerous occasions where bears have frequented the Morefield Campground and put campers, staff and the bears themselves at risk. When campers leave their coolers and food containers unattended in campsites while visiting the park, they may be cited for leaving unsecured food available to bears.

Food storage using approved bear-proof lockers has been proven to be highly effective in reducing the habituation of bears to human food. Currently, Morefield Campground has only 17 food storage lockers for its 329 campsites. Providing additional food storage lockers will reduce access to food for bears and other wildlife, resulting in safer camping conditions for visitors, less property damage to camper equipment, and a reduced chance that a bear will have to be removed and relocated, or worse, euthanized.

The Mesa Verde Foundation is launching a campaign to purchase additional bear-proof food storage lockers for Morefield Campground. You can help by making a gift of any amount. Gifts of a $100 or more will receive all the benefits of being a Friend of Mesa Verde Foundation. Those who contribute $1,500 will receive their name or group's name engraved on a 2"x3" plaque affixed to one of the new bear-proof storage lockers.

Help us protect the bears and become a Friend of Mesa Verde Foundation!

For more information on the bear-proof storage locker campaign, contact Janet McFarland Burlile at (303) 331-3120 or janet@mesaverdefoundation.org or visit www.mesaverdefoundation.org

Mesa Verde Foundation Assists with Upgrading Audio Visual Presentations at the Park

As mentioned in the Superintendent's column, audio visual presentations at the Chapin Mesa Archaeological Museum and Morefield Campground are being upgraded to give guests a much-improved experience. The Mesa Verde Foundation has worked closely with project managers and vendors to help see these projects come to fruition.

Funds were provided through the Guest Donation Program, which comes from guests who stay at Far View Lodge and opt to contribute $1 per night's stay. Improvements are completed at Chapin Mesa Archaeological Museum and guests are already raving about the new experience. The campground project will commence later this spring in time for the summer camping season.

The Mesa Verde Foundation is working to go green and will be converting its newsletter to an electronic version in 2018. Please be sure your email address is on file by emailing info@mesaverdefoundation.org.
